Research Capstone

September 2025 – Present

Title: Presidential Elections, Economic Uncertainty, and Local Housing Markets

- Implemented panel event study design using state-level pending home sales data (2012–2025); event-time dummies centered on 6-month pre-election baseline to isolate election-cycle effects.
- Preliminary findings: elections reduce sales volumes 2.3% on average; pronounced intertemporal trends observed: 5–6% post-election spike (Nov–Dec) followed by 5–10% trough (Jan–Feb), inconsistent with standard theoretical models.
- Tested Economic Policy Uncertainty moderation; interactions non-significant, suggesting election effects operate independently of EPU indices.
- Leading interpretation consistent with intertemporal substitution around inauguration; additional robustness checks and alternative event windows in progress.
